What are

Social Enterprises?

Social enterprises are small businesses created by Woods to offer training and employment opportunities to people with disabilities. Woods leads the human service industry in developing integrated work environments that employ people with challenges. Residents work side-by-side their non-disabled peers to learn more about the daily operation of a business. Woods currently has four social enterprises and plans to continue developing new ones. Existing social enterprises include:

SOARING TO NEW Heights

Beechtree Products We employ individuals with and without brain injury to work in a community-integrated business making and selling bath and body products. Items are sold online and in Yellow Daffodil shops.

The Need and Why Your Participation is So Important

Funds raised at our Fête & Fundraiser are “unrestricted funds” that have not been earmarked for a specific purpose. These funds allow Woods to be more responsive and flexible as we continue the transformation into a world class population health, non-profit organization. Unrestricted funds permit Woods to invest in new areas of programming – like social enterprises – and target other important areas like advocacy and raising public awareness. The result is not only a healthier organization, but a marked and positive change in the quantity and quality of programming delivered to the individuals served by Woods. Unrestricted funds are also critical to our research efforts, measuring our future impact. Woods Services’ National Research and Evaluation Institute collects and analyzes data and reviews evidenced-informed programs and services in order to develop innovative approaches that help people live healthy and fulfilling lives.
